A Proposed Privacy Code for Asia-Pacific Cyberlaw

Graham Greenleaf
School of Law, University of New South Wales

- 1. Introduction
- 2. Australia's international privacy obligations
  - 2.1. The OECD privacy Guidelines
  - 2.2. The Council of Europe privacy Convention
  - 2.3. The ICCPR, A17
  - 2.4. Sectoral and specific agreements
- 3. The European Union privacy Directive
  - 3.1. Introduction
  - 3.2. History of the Directive
  - 3.3. Structure and scope of the Directive
    - General structure
    - Scope of the Directive
  - 3.4. The Directive's 'information privacy principles'
    - Data quality requirements
    - Legitimate processing
    - Use and disclosure - the 'finality' principle
    - Other rights of data subjects
    - Security
    - Notification
    - Special categories
  - 3.5. Enforcement of the Directive at national level
    - Powers of the supervisory authorities
    - Individual rights of enforcement
    - Codes of conduct
    - Reach of national laws
    - Time limits for national implementation
  - 3.6. Supra-national supervision of the Directive
    - The EU Commission's role
    - The Committee of Member States, and the EU Council
    - The Working Party of supervising authorities
- 4. The EU Directive's data export prohibitions
  - 4.1. Introduction - 'equivalence' and 'adequacy'
  - 4.2. Exports of personal data from the EU to third countries
    - Remote access to EU personal data from third countries
    - Imports of personal data from third countries into the EU
  - 4.3. The meaning of 'adequate level of protection'
    - Mandatory exceptions to the requirement of adequate protection
  - 4.4. Authorisation of particular transfers without 'adequate' protection
    - The meaning of 'sufficient guarantee' - supplier / recipient contracts
    - The meaning of 'sufficient guarantee' - industry 'codes of conduct'
4.5. Implications for countries without 'adequate' laws

4.6. The mechanisms for decisions concerning 'adequate protection'
  - Decision and notification by a Member State
  - Decisions by the Committee on adequacy
  - 'Complaints' about adequacy
  - Commission negotiations with third countries
  - A political or a legal process?

5. Implications of data export restrictions for the Asia-Pacific

5.1. Existing national data export restrictions in Europe - examples
  - Examples of enforcement
  - The implications of European enforcement

5.2. Which Asia-Pacific laws provide 'adequate protection' for the EU Directive?
  - Comprehensive 'adequacy'
  - Sectoral 'adequacy'
  - The overall picture in the Asia-Pacific

5.3. Data export prohibitions in the Asia-Pacific
  - Québec's data export law
  - Hong Kong's data export law
  - Taiwan's data export law
  - Closing the EU 'loophole'
  - Export restrictions within the Asia-Pacific
  - Two models for data export restrictions - 'prohibition order' and 'breach'

5.4. Do the OECD Guidelines protect against export prohibitions?

6. Towards an Asia-Pacific information privacy Convention?

6.1. The Asia-Pacific Information Infrastructure (APII) and privacy

6.2. Strengthening local privacy laws

6.3. The need for a regional agreement

6.4. Can existing international agreements provide a vehicle?

6.5. Elements of an Asia-Pacific information privacy Convention
  - Mechanism for development
  - Nature of the agreement
  - When an agreement comes into force
  - Content of privacy standards
  - Compliance mechanisms
  - Conclusion - Wishful thinking, or Australia's opportunity?

Appendix - Taiwan's new privacy law

Source: http://www.ascusc.org/ 06/1996