

Harvard Scholarship

Be part of a brighter future in the Arab world

Want to become a government leader in the Arab World?

If you have the aspiration to become a future leader in the public sector, the Dubai School of Government, in collaboration with the Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University, will give you the expert guidance needed to realise this ambition.

The Dubai School of Government is offering two scholarships for a Masters degree programme in Public Administration in International Development. This multi-disciplinary programme offers high level technical training and professional school approach with an economics-focused emphasis in policy and practice. This highly challenging course is designed to ensure that tomorrow's leaders are not only skilled analysts but are able to articulate a vision and build consensus around that vision.

Applicants should have a good honours degree from an accredited University and they must be fluent in both Arabic and English. Acceptance on the course will be subject to the requirements of Harvard University and successful applicants are requested to commit to working at the Dubai School of Government for a specified period of time upon successful completion of the course.

If you have what it takes to become a government leader in the Arab world, submit your CV and a covering letter – both in English - stating your reason for application to recruitment@dsg.ae

Closing date for applications is 7th December, 2005. Successful applicants will be subsequently contacted for interviews.

For more information, please visit www.dsg.ae